Adopted Against the Charter.

A special meeting of the City Connell was held last evening in connection with the citizens' meeting called to consider the matter of the application of the Megantic Raliroad Company to the Legislature for of its charter, so as to an amendment allow it to build from the foot of Moosehead Lake to a point on the Katahdin Iron Works Rallway, and thence cast to the Penobscot river, thus giving a parallel road to the Piscataquis Ra Iroad. The two boards met in their respective rooms and after the transaction of business before them went into joint convention in the City Hail, Mayor Nea ley in the chair. A large number of interested citizens were present, considering the inclemency of the weather, and much interest was manifested. On the platform was exhibited a large map, showing the location and route of the Bangor and Piscataqu s Railroad from

Milo to the Lake, and the proposed route of the Megantic Road from the Penobscot river to the Lake, which was used by some of the speakers in illustration of Mayor Nealley, on opening the meeting stated that the joint convention was called for the purpose of hearing from our citizens an expression of their views, pro and con, relating to the amending of the charter of the Megantic railroad so to enable them to run around the foot of Modschead

The Mayor inquired if Mr. Woodard was present, and was informed by Mr. Beal that he was at the Bangor House waiting the arrival of Mr. Ross, the train being late.

Hon. George W. Ladd inquired if this was a public meeting in which all were invited to take part, and being answered in the affirmative went on to give a brief sketch of the history of the Piscataquis Railroad from the tme it was begun, twenty years ago next March, the disputes about and the final settle ment of its location, the various expenditures made in constructing and extending it, and he said that the basis of the construction and outlay was the fact of the road being considered as a part of a great through line a bich would eventually run into Canada. That project to-day and for the last five years has been worth something. It shoult be seen to that the road should not be made valueless and the amount expended by Bangor and the attendance of the many the means, the granting of the amendment of the construction and in violation of company, and which, in our view, is contrary to honof able action and in violation of compacts made in the past, and which, if granted, must result in series and the contributing to its support shall sap it of its support it how receives from business and expenses along its line. lieve there was a citizen of Bangor, not ture. He does not pretend to know whether the Piscataquis is the best route or properly constructed for the purposes of the Megantle line, but that is a matter that should be determined by competent authority. He spoke of the clause in the charter by which the Megantie road should not run nearer than fifteen like to the Piscataonia, but said the genal of the Piscataonia of the Pisc tie road should not run nearer than fifteen miles to the Piscataquis, but said the general railroad law of the State contained no such limitations. As to the Megantic Company going before the Legislature three times, it was no unusual thing for railroad companies to do, even the Piscataquis Company had been before the Legislature thirty-one times. The Bangor and Piscataquis road is known by every one not to be such an one as gould be made available under the terms of the Canadlan grant, and went on to show that both in construction, rails and direction it was entirely out of the question. If they had the charter granted them they would not use the road for their through line even if they could have it for a gift, but as a connecting line have it for a gift, but as a connecting line he looked for a large amount of business

> The men who are before the Legislature are not the ones who have been there before. They failed to carry out what they undertook and these men have gone on to complete it. He then proceeded to explain what has been said about the read crossing the Piscataquis at the foot of the Lake twenty-two feet above the grade, and said this was as low as could be done by bridges over and not crossing at grade. That side tracks and connections would be made by the Megantic Company, and that they were withing to so obligate themselves in the act amending their charter.

Millicent had been brought on; and was supposed to have left her childhood and tho schoolroom behind her. Nadine, for many reasons, would not consent to hehe companion. "One was because she could not well leave her mother; another because of her engagement to Paul Annerley; another (was it so very important?) because she could not give up the 'toition of Mr. Durin's little daughter.
So Millicent had squared matters by declaring to her aunite that though she considered she knew as much music as would carry her or through life, her knowledge of German was still singularly deficient, and auntic, delighted at this trait of intellectual diligence in her nicce, had at once requested Miss Roche to continue her three visits a week to Park hane as heretofore.

"Tell me about it," says Nadine breathleasly, her big blue eves enlarged with

"Tell me about it," says Nadinc breathlessly, her big blue eyes enlarged with fear and curiosity. She has seated her-fear and curiosity. She has seated herself on a dainty prie dieu, and is leaning forward with clasped hands in an attitude highly suggestive of prayer, and therefore highly suited to the chair.

Millicent, nothing loath, makes her a present of the entire scene from beginning to end.

"He might have been a much worse burglar, all things considered, and there was quite a touch of chivalry—a suspiction of Claude Duval—in the fact of his making me a present of my own locket," she says, still unable to refrain from turning the whole thing into ridicule.
"To go to the very root of the matter, it must be confessed that I am the prond possessor of his heart. He left me that at least."

"The cowerd!" says Nadine, clasping

"The coward!" says Nadine, clasping her pretty hands, "to attack alone one poor woman! But, Millicent, from what you tell me, I—I dor.'t think the burglar could have been quite a common man. Was he tall—handsome?"

Was he tall—handsome?"

"Handsome! Why, I couldn't see a feature in his face. You don't suppose that that sort of person comes around with an open, ingenuous countenance, ready for all men's inspection? If so, you are mistaken. My turglar came with a mask that prevented me from seeing the chiseled features that I feel convinced lay beneath it. Altogether, he was not of the opmmon, every day lot that one meets. He was a departure from the regular lines. He was strange'to me! Strange! And yet."—

Suddenly the half mocking, wholly gay air she has used hitterto drops from her, and she turns upon Nadine a startled glance. She leans toward her, and laying her hand upon her shoulders, subjects ing her hand upon her shoulders, subjects her to an exhaustive scrutiny.

"I must speak. I must tell you," she says at last. "It has weighed upon mo ever since, and—and—the others would consider it in the Leht of a nightmare, or else say the idea arose from a feeling of nervous horror; tut it did not."

"What is it, Millicent? You forget I do not understand," says Nadine, a little awed by the solemnity of the other's glance.

"Just this: that that terrible burglar, from the time he en'ered my room to the time he left it, seemed strangely familiar. I cannot account for it. His voice I never heard before. He was dressed in mel". She sinks back in her chair, looking pale and exhausted.

"It is mere nervousness," says Nadine tenderly. "A chithera arising from an overwrought sensitility. Do not think of him again, darling. Rest, and time will cure you of thin foolish phantasy." "Nothing will cure me of the certainty that a face well known to me lay behind that humble mask," returns Millicent with a shudder She rallies a little after a while, and a swift smile curves her lips.

"We are a doomed family," she says gayly. "A prey to burglars. First my aunt, Lady Valworth's, diamonds disappear, not to be restored by all the detective power in England, and now, my sapph res! Poor Uncle Timothy! he gave much of his life to a contemplation of those stones, and now a vulgar criminal is the possessor of them. It is very cruel of me to laugh, is it not? Especially as I am the only one that can see a comical side of the affair. Yes, I am sarry that I am not more sorry because of their disappearance." She rallies a little after a while, and a

"He was here this morning, darling," asys Mrs. Braud, who has just entered the room and heard the drift of the conversation "but you were then so weak versation, "but you were then so weak that of course I could not see him. He heard nothing, as I told Brown to be silent abouting, as I tout Brown to be si-lent about our sensation to any caller— so he merely left word that he hoped your headache would be better soon (I suggested headache to Brown as a gen-eral and safe sort of not at home), and that he would call again to-morrow morning."

"Wonderfully attentive for him," says millicent, smoothing down the laces of her loose gown.

"Dear fellow! He is always all he ought to be! So like his good father," says Mrs. Brand effusively.

"Inspector Dunn has just been here," goes on Mrs. Brand presently. "He seems a clever man, and holds out great hopes of being able to capture the robber and restore to "you your sapphires. I ran up at once to tell you. He seems to think it will be deficult to get rid of the sapphires, even should the robber go to Antwerp or some of those foreign places. All the shipping ports are being closely watched. He really gave me great hope. You under Timothy has been here on and off all day, but I would not list him see you, he was so excited. Of course he feels the loss of the jewels. He thought a great deal of them. That is bardly to be wondered at, my dear Neddering. is bardly to be wondered at, my dear Nadine, comidering their size- and their
